To the Ratios of the Dispates.

A preacher and a magistate, on one side, and myself on the other, are "chinning" it over the question whether it was General Washington or Chief-Justice Marshail that said he did not intend any one should be more polite than himself, as he raised his last to a negro who had lifted his. I am on the side of the Chief Justice. Say I am right, and settle the point for us.

Somebody once asked an Irishman whether be pronounced the word "neither" "ni'ther" or "mee'ther." "Nayther," said the Itishman. So say we as to the above interrogalory. But if either, it was surely the Chief Justice. What say our

The first American newspaper was issued at Boston September 25, 1690. It was intended to be issued once a month, but was immediately suppressed by the authorities—for what reason we do not know. It was a small sheet called Publick Occurrences, both foreign and domestic. Only one copy is now known to be in existence. While at Captain Horer's place an invitation was received from Mr. and Mrs. Wilson to visit their place, but a short distance away, which invitation was accepted by the whole party. The place of Mr. and Mrs. Wisson realizes the ideal where nature is uncommonly kind. The house is of the large, roomy southern style, with wide verandas, the wide hall, after the southern fashion, extending through the middle, and spacious rooms on either hand. The camellas had attained a height of 8 to 12 feet, being trained similar to our Norway spruce, has received a letter from Mr. Bennock in branching from the ground. Outside of the house was one of still larger growth, fully 16 feet in height, a perfectly symmetrical mass of foliage and bloom, although the ground underneath was thickly carpeted with flowers that had fallen. Mr. Wilson assured us that this was the finest specimen to be found in the entire South. In his accomplished wife we were introduced to the well known writer, Augusta J. Evans, whose works, "Beulah," "Vashti." "St. Elmo." and other tales of southern life, have delighted readers everywhere. She received her guests—over 100 in number—with a grace of manner that charmed and delighted all, giving to each as introduced a handshake—after the southern fashion—and a pleasant word. The picture carried away in my mind is that of refined and delicate features set in a frame of soft brown curls falling to the shoulders: dark, pleasant, expressive eye; a figure hardly up to medium size for a lady, and a delicate appearance, as if the mental structure rather overbalanced the physical. Her dress seemed so in perfect harmony with herself that I therefore concluded she was well-dressed, since there was nothing to attract the attention from her to it. Official Life in England.

Official life in England is very poorly rewarded as compared with legal, both in salary and possion. An ambassador of the first rank, such as the late Lord Stratford de Redeliffe or Lord Lyons, after a life of exile, fraught at times with intense labor and anxiety, can only receive $10,000 pension a year, while the highest consular pension is $5,500. Lord Hammond, after fifty years' service in the Foreign Office, retired on $10,000, and no civil service official gats more. On the other hand a judge of the Supreme Court receives a pension of $17,500, and a lord chancellor, if pension, although at one time there were five of the latter taking their $25,000 a year.
